

Pricingnet Announces Version 3.0; New Features Include Automatic Shopping List for Buyers

Pricingnet, an online, wholesale only market for industrial distributors, announces the release of Version 3.0. The new Notify List feature allows buyers to upload a “shopping list” of desired items and target prices, and automatically receive notification when those items are available at that price or better.

Menlo Park, California (PRWEB) January 10, 2006 -- Pricingnet, the company that revolutionized industrial distributors' ability to cooperate to liquidate inventory and lower purchasing costs, announces the release of Version 3.0. “We created Pricingnet based on years of consulting in the industrial distribution trade,” says David Jacobs, president and founder. “We knew that the industrial distributor is being squeezed on both the buy and sell side. Pricingnet is an online community that allows him to liquidate dead and slow-moving items very efficiently, as well as locate new sources of supply—often at amazing prices.”

“Response to Pricingnet from the HVAC and PVF industries has been very enthusiastic,” Jacobs continues. “We've been listening to feedback and have added several new features in Release 3.0. One that we expect to create a lot of excitement is the Notify List. Buyers can upload a list of desired items. When those items are available at a target price or better, the buyer will receive a report via e-mail.” The report may be received daily, weekly, or monthly, and is ready to print and fax as an availability inquiry, purchase order, or request to call. Version 3.0 will allow a Notify List of up to 100,000 items to be imported directly from a Microsoft Excel file. “Imagine being able to automatically shop for each of your SKUs every day,” Jacobs comments.

Version 3.0 of Pricingnet is active now at www.pricingnet.com. There is no cost to join or buy on Pricingnet, but it is open only to wholesale participants in the industrial distribution trade.
